I have, I've got a couple of. .Mama is sad, Daddy is sad, please help him get over his sadness before it starts to suck the life out of him and the rest of us. I love this! I've got lots of mama sadness! In the big picture, I'm a good mama, but I'm not a good mama on the days I'm not feeling well, or on the days I'm sick with something nasty. On those days I get really crabby, and I don't like it when my Daddy is crabby. I know he's sad too, and when he's sad he gets crabby, too. We both need to be happier so that makes things better for us. I think this world would be a better place if everyone was happier, so we really need to try and be happy! From the time I was about two until I was about four, I seemed to be able to pick up on when Daddy was sad. Even then, it was probably a projection from me. The day he went away to work on a special project was one of those times I remember feeling that he was sad, but he was doing a really good job hiding it. I remember him coming home and telling me that he really loved me and he had a surprise for me. That didn't mean that he didn't want me to cry, but when he found out I had figured out what was going on, he spent about a half hour scolding me for being so smart, then gave me an action figure of Superman. He seemed happier after that. I suppose I'm having an emotional response to your comment, but I just love this! I'm kind of in the same boat as you and the Babe. My husband lost his job last year and hasn't had a steady job since. It's been a rough season, and it 2d92ce491b
