Irish Republican Army (IRA) and Sinn Fein terrorism trainer Seamus McElwain has told an inquiry he had attended seven military funerals since the mid-1980s. Two others have told the same inquiry their turn as a terrorist trainer came in 1997 when they attended the funerals of the three IRA volunteers from the Andersonstown and Ligoniel areas who had been killed in a bomb blast at Brighton Barracks, Belfast. Mr McElwain also told the inquiry he had spoken to the families of other men who had died in the IRA. The witness, who is a member of Sinn Fein's leadership team, was giving evidence today as part of the inquiry into the reign of terror by the IRA in Northern Ireland. In a statement to the inquiry, he said he first became involved in IRA terrorism in the mid-1980s when he helped the South Armagh Brigade run training camps for new recruits. He was arrested by police in 1997 after a bomb attack on a mobile phone shop in Belfast's Bogside area. Mr McElwain said he had been trained in the use of bombs by the IRA and the Ulster Defence Association (UDA) and that the training camps run by both organisations were known as “sus”. It was a term that referred to one of the earliest training camps that were set up in South Armagh at the height of the IRA-UDA feud. In his statement he said that in his early days he had attended the funerals of men who had died in training accidents. “It was a practice that continued through the years and was done to help strengthen links between the various units in the Army,” he said. “I attended seven funerals, three of them in Andersonstown and Ligoniel and one in Ardoyne,” he added. In his statement, Mr McElwain also revealed
